A comparative study of the portrayal of the master/servant relationship in The Remains of the Day by Kazuo Ishiguro and The Inimitable Jeeves by P.G. Wodehouse. In addition to exploring how the respective authors portray this relationship, I intend to examine how they highlight the nature of class through the relationships.